KPMG currently works with (as internal or external auditors, or advisors) some 60% of all RPs in England and the knowledge and experience KPMG has of the housing sector, combined with the huge amount of sector-specific benchmarking data that they are privy too enables Andy to provide advice and guidance across a range of control, compliance, assurance and regulatory issues.

Andy is also responsible for ensuring that KPMG's housing internal audit work complies with the Firm's in-house quality review programmes in terms of quality and compliance against statutory requirements; and in addition that all KPMG housing internal audits pass external reviews carried out for the same purposes. To date the Midlands Housing Internal Audit Team has passed all these annual assessments.

During his time with KPMG Andy was also seconded to one of the largest RPs in London, with over 50,000 units (turnover c£400m pa) to carry out an Organisation-wide Diagnostic Review. His tasks included re-designing the target operating model for the organisation in order to bring about a much more coherent and one-organisation wide way of working, rather than the silo type working that existed at the time. This helped the RP ensure that its governance, operating models and group structures were re-designed and made much more fit for purpose, future proofed and could deliver both efficiencies and better governance, whilst ensuring better services were delivered to its customers.
